

Morality, Authority, and Law: Essays in Second-Personal Ethics I By Stephen L. Darwall Section I concerns its distinctiveness among normative concepts; the metaethics of 'bipolar obligations' (owed to someone); the relation between moral obligation's form and the substance of our obligations; whether the fact that an action is wrong is itself a reason against action (as opposed to simply entailing that sufficient moral reasons independently exist); and whether morality requires general principles or might be irreducibly particularistic. Morality, Authority, and Law Section II consists of two essays on one discussing the relation between Kant's 'autonomy of the will' and the right to autonomy.

Morality, Authority, and Law

Stephen Darwall presents a series of essays that explore the view that central moral concepts are irreducibly second-personal in that they entail mutual accountability and the authority to address demands. Morality, Authority, and Law He illustrates the power of the second-personal framework to illuminate a wide variety of issues in moral political and another arguing that what makes an agent's desires and will reason giving is not the basis of 'internal' practical reasons in desire but the dignity of persons and shared second-personal authority. Morality, Authority, and Law Two essays take up Joseph Raz's influential 'normal justification thesis' and argue that it fails to capture authority's second-personal nature without which authority cannot create 'exclusionary' and 'preemptive' reasons. Morality, Authority, and Law Section III focuses on the nature of authority and the law. Morality, Authority, and Law The first sketches the insights that a second-personal approach can provide into the nature of law and the grounds of distinctions between different parts of law: Morality, Authority, and Law The second shows how a second-personal framework can be used to develop the 'civil recourse theory' in the law of torts. Morality, Authority, and Law epub file Morality Authority and Law: Essays in Second-Personal Ethics I
