

The Bloody Man By Mick Lewis

{site_link} post a commentThe cannibal Sawney Bean in his cave lair in the seventeenth century a bitter child tumbling from a car in the twentieth - a segue between the two as destinies are twisted and evil set on course. Jack works in a video shop in Bristol living out an uncomplicated dull existence that is irrevocably changed one morning when the stranger in black walks through the door asking for the nastiest films Jack can recommend. He's also into history albeit of a twisted sort: the bloody history connected to one particular cave on the Galloway coast and what might still be waiting there for someone crazy enough to look: What Jack soon discovers is that the stranger Bane's tastes in nasty entertainment run far darker than merely watching videos. And after weeks of systematic torture by the evil Bane Jack just might be that someone. Bane is into horror and death.

The Bloody Man

