

Nature as Local Heritage in Africa: Africa Volume 77 Issue 1 (Africa Special Issues) By Thomas J. Bassett Nature as Local Heritage in african books So far so promising but despite its apparently precise terminology this conception with its emphasis on local cultures and capacities and the devolution of control to local communities remains poorly conceptualized. Nature as Local Heritage in Africa booking This collection of papers first published in the journal Africa in 2007 presents the fruits of a collaborative project between African American and French scholars seeking to understand in more specific terms how natural heritage territory and identity relate to each other. Book Nature as Local Heritage in african books They argue that particularly at a time when neo-liberal reforms (decentralization privatization) are being grafted onto community-based organizations and local knowledge it is important that we give greater attention to how nature communities resources and management practices are conceptualized prioritized and (re)configured to ensure that livelihoods and environments are truly enhanced in a sustainable and equitable manner:
