

The Origin Of Our Knowledge Of Right And Wrong: With A Biographical Note By Franz Brentano

Franz Clemens Honoratus Hermann Brentano (/brɛnˈtɑːnoʊ/; German: [brɛnˈtaːno]) was a philosopher psychologist and priest whose work strongly influenced not only students {site_link} Edmund Husserl {site_link} Sigmund Freud {site_link} Tomáš Masaryk {site_link} Rudolf Steiner Alexius Meinong {site_link} Carl Stumpf Anton Marty Kazimierz Twardowski and Christian von Ehrenfels but many others whose work would follow and make use of his original ideas and concepts. Franz Clemens Honoratus Hermann Brentano (/brɛnˈtɑːnoʊ/; German: [brɛnˈtaːno]) was a philosopher psychologist and priest whose work strongly influenced not only students {site_link} Edmund Husserl {site_link} Sigmund Freud {site_link} Tomáš Masaryk {site_link} Rudolf Steiner Alexius Meinong {site_link} Carl Stumpf Anton Marty Kazimierz Twardowski and Christian von Ehrenfels but many others whose work would follow and make use of his original ideas and concepts. must reread Philosophy Psychology Excerpt from The Origin of the Knowledge of Right and Wrong The present translation owes its origin to a desire on the part of the translator of bringing to the wider notice of his fellow-countrymen a work which has proved beneficial and stimulating to himself. It is now alas too late to do more than record the translator's debt to the late Professor Adamson of Glasgow University whose revision and correction of this essay was one of the last services rendered to the cause of truth by a life-long disciple, Written during short intervals of leisure while studying with Professor Anton Marty of Prague University it has had the advantage of his careful and constant supervision, Alexander of Owens College Manchester for his valuable help in the general revision and the translation of several difficult passages. The Origin Of Our Knowledge Of Right And Wrong: With A Biographical Note.

. {site_link}

good. Without his aid it would scarcely have seen the light. The translator has especially to thank Professor S. A