

The Rhetoric of Romanticism By Paul De Man 9780231055277 Love its approach and easy description! 9780231055277 This last work by Paul de Man before his death in 1983 brings together what is essentially his complete work on the study of European Romanticism and post-Romanticism. He then taught at Cornell University Johns Hopkins University and the University of Zurich before ending up on the faculty in French and Comparative Literature at Yale University where he was considered part of the Yale School of deconstruction. After his death the discovery of some two hundred articles he wrote during World War II for collaborationist newspapers including one explicitly anti Semitic caused a scandal and provoked a reconsideration of his life and w Paul de Man was a Belgian born deconstructionist literary critic and theorist. He then taught at Cornell University Johns Hopkins University and the University of Zurich before ending up on the faculty in French and Comparative Literature at Yale University where he was considered part of the Yale School of deconstruction. After his death the discovery of some two hundred articles he wrote during World War II for collaborationist newspapers including one explicitly anti Semitic caused a scandal and provoked a reconsideration of his life and work: Still informative but authors like De Man are the reason literary theory catches a bad name, 9780231055277 Here: Autobiography as De-Facement De Man frames autobiography as a figure of reading rather than a genre - and that's a clever fascinating hypothesis, The Rhetoric of Romanticism Paul de Man was a Belgian born deconstructionist literary critic and theorist. At the time of his death from cancer he was Sterling Professor of the Humanities at Yale. At the time of his death from cancer he was Sterling Professor of the Humanities at Yale: De Man oversaw the dissertations of both Gayatri Spivak and Barbara Johnson[1]

Pomposity does not equal quality you pretentious bastard. He began teaching at Bard College. Later he completed his Ph.D. at Harvard University in the late 1950s. He began teaching at Bard College. Later he completed his Ph.D. at Harvard University in the late 1950s. {site_link}

